Cloud-level living in San Francisco

KARL MONDON/STAFF

New luxury condos rise up in downtown San Francisco, where a two-story penthouse is expected to cost $49 million.

SAN FRANCISCO — Straight through the roof. That's where the elevator cage seems headed as passengers race toward the top floor of a luxury high-rise tower that's under construction near the water's edge in the South of Market district.

And straight through the roof is where the price seems to be headed, too: $49 million for the 14,000-square-foot, duplex penthouse on the 41st and 42nd floors.

"San Francisco is hot," said Lee Summers, a senior global adviser and broker at Sotheby's International Realty in New York. "People are really buying up a storm there. If you have made a lot of money, you want a lot of luxury.

Ferguson violence

Arrest made in officers' shooting

Suspect denies targeting the two cops; activists dispute police claim that man was a protester

By Jim Salter
Associated Press

CLAYTON, Mo. — A 20-year-old man charged Sunday with shooting two police officers watching over a demonstration outside the Ferguson Police Department had attended a protest there earlier that night but told investigators he wasn't targeting the officers, authorities said.

Williams
20-year-old charged with shooting two police officers.

St. Louis County Prosecutor Robert McCulloch said suspect Jeffrey Williams told authorities he was firing at someone with whom he was in a dispute.

"We're not sure we completely buy that part of it," McCulloch said, adding that there might have been other people in a vehicle Williams is accused of firing from.

Williams is charged with two counts of first-degree assault, one count of firing a weapon

College ball's day in court

NCAA, players' legal showdown set for Tuesday

9th Circuit to hear association's appeal of ruling over payments

By Howard Mintz

With March Madness fast approaching, it is normally the time of year when the NCAA can bask in basketball mania that sends billions in ad revenue to television networks and hundreds of millions of dollars back to college sports programs.

But all that money is also a reminder that the NCAA has to worry about losing control of how large a share of that bounty should go to student athletes for playing big-time football and basketball.

On Tuesday, that question reaches a pivotal stage in a groundbreaking legal fight over the NCAA's limits on compensating college play-

Pinole-Hercules wastewater treatment plant

Two cities spar over labor agreement

You will be excused for not keeping abreast of the latest developments with the Pinole-Hercules wastewater treatment plant. It's not the sort of topic that generates much Twitter traffic.

The facility, which was built in 1955, has needed an upgrade since about the time pay phones disappeared — a fact that eventually came to the attention of the Regional Water Quality Control Board, which imposed a demand for modernization. Discussions about how to make that happen have been going on for at least five years. The fun didn't begin until four months ago, when the Pinole City Council took its role as lead partner to heart by voting approval of a project labor agreement for the upgrade project without consulting next-door neighbor Hercules.

Pinole Councilwoman Debbie Long uttered the words that still echo in West County: "There's nothing in our agreement that states we have to engage Hercules when it comes to contracts, because guess who signs? Pinole."

Fast-forward to last Tuesday, when the Hercules City Council responded to Pinole's unilateral decision by voting against implementation of a PLA.

"Pinole's tactic of voting for this almost painted Hercules into a corner, like we had to do this," Hercules Vice Mayor Dan Romero said, an edge to his voice.
