■ WALL STREET'S BULLS HAVE LEARNED TO TAKE BAD NEWS IN STRIDE/BUSINESS INSIDE SPORTS

Golden moments
Cal's gold medal eight-oared crew toasts 50th anniversary
LOCAL

MONDAY
March 16, 1998

Fantastic plastic
New microscopic medicine-delivery system works like a credit card
LOCAL

Return engagement
Kris Weems and the Cardinal make it back to the Sweet 16
SPORTS

Partly cloudy
High: 61
Low: 48
Details in COFFEE BREAK

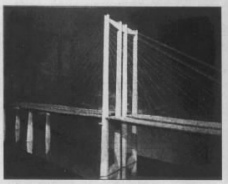
The Oakland Tribune

FRIEND OF THE PEOPLE IT SERVES

ANG NEWSPAPERS

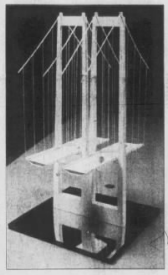
50 CENTS

Pick the new bridge



TWIN TOWER CABLE-STAYED CONCEPT

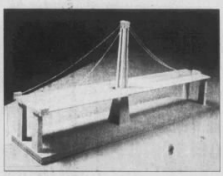
SINGLE TOWER CABLE-STAYED CONCEPT



TWIN TOWER SUSPENSION CONCEPT

WHICH ONE do you like best? An advisory panel to the Metropolitan Transportation Commission has narrowed the design choices for a new eastern span of the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge to these four, and wants public opinion before making a decision. Two designs are cable-stayed spans, and two are suspension spans. They all feature single and double towers. To register your opinion:

- Phone MTC's TravInfo line at 817-1717 and select 7 from the main menu (650 area code residents must dial area codes 408 or 415 first);
- Write to Mary King, chair, MTC Bay Bridge Design Task Force, MetroCenter, 101 8th St., Oakland, Calif. 94607;
- Send a fax to (510) 464-7848;
- Or e-mail to info@mtc.ca.gov.



SINGLE TOWER SUSPENSION CONCEPT

The design group will bring its recommendation to the full commissi..n June 24.

Willey adds more fuel to Clinton case

Says president lies in denying alleged incident

By Pete Yost
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Calling President Clinton a liar in a compelling television interview, Kathleen Willey said Sunday night that she felt overpowered by his sexual advance against her in the White House and was so startled she wanted "to just give him a good slap across the face."

"I just could not believe . . . the recklessness" of Clinton in grouping her as she met with him in 1993 at a time when Willey's husband faced financial ruin, Willey said. "He killed himself the same day she went to the Oval Office to tell the president she needed a job.

Clinton "kissed me on my mouth and pulled me closer to him," Willey said in a 40-minute interview on CBS "60 Minutes."

"And . . . I remember thinking — . . . what in the world is he doing?" he touched my breasts with his hand . . . and he whispered . . . 'I've wanted to do this ever since I laid eyes on you,'" she said.

"I didn't feel intimidated. I just felt overpowered," Willey, 51, said of the incident. She noted that Clinton is a big man and said he was holding her tightly in an embrace just off the Oval Office — in a hallway leading to the president's private study.

Willey

Willey said the story she was telling before a nationwide television audience was the same one she swore to before a grand jury last week in Kenneth Starr's investigation. Clinton, meanwhile, has sworn in a deposition that what Willey says happened did not happen. The conflicts in their stories means

Please see Willey, NEWS-7

Parents and the law: Don't just do nothing

By Monica Gyulai
STAFF WRITER

From changing diapers to building a college fund to consoling that first case of puppy love gone sour, being a parent isn't easy.

That's especially so in a judgmental society, with government agencies ready to pounce on even the suggestion of child abuse or neglect.

In such an atmosphere, the question becomes: When do long-held parental rights infringe on those of their children?

Parents and family experts say there is no clear answer.

Since the late 1950s, children's advocates have successfully pressed for policies that acknowledge minors have some individual rights, and have pushed for reporting of sexual molestation, emotional battering, physical beating and other such abuse.

As a result, teachers and doctors are required to report evidence of abuse, and public awareness has been raised.

"Before, it was sort of — you hit your kid, and that's your business," said Carole Shauffer, executive director of the Youth Law Center in San Francisco. "Now, we have mandatory reporting. And we recognize that some children who run away

This family photo shows Christina Corrigan and her mother, Marlene Corrigan.

Please see Parent, NEWS-7

IRS penalties out of control, chairman says

By Rob Wells
ASSOCIATED PRESS

■ Technology expert and 'eternal optimist' changes IRS

BUSINESS-1

WASHINGTON — The IRS is after more than your taxes. The agency hit errant taxpayers with a bill for penalties and interest totaling $18.3 billion in 1996, and collected more than $4.4 billion of it.

The penalties are so large that even the Internal Revenue Service's commissioner says it's time to re-examine a system that punishes not only tax cheats but also people who make honest mistakes.

The chairman of the main Senate committee that oversees the IRS says the penalties are "out of control."

Sen. William V. Roth Jr., R-Del., Finance Committee chairman, said problems with the penalty system add up to a "reason the income tax is losing the confidence of the American people. Make no mistake about that."

If Congress fixes the system to reduce the amount collected, however, the government would lose revenue. Net interest on penalties and late taxes alone totaled $10.6 billion in 1996. That's greater than the agency's $7.3 billion budget that year.

A comprehensive fix is unlikely this year. Roth vowed "to do as much as possible" with a pending IRS overhaul bill but declined to say what that might include.

Assessed penalties and interest have wavered from 1.2 percent to 1.6 percent of total tax collections in the 1990s, with no discernible trend in either direction. But that's a jump from 1979, when simple penalties totaled 0.26 percent of tax collections; figures for interest weren't available then, according to an Associated Press review of IRS data.

IRS penalties outstrip comparable collections from other agencies. U.S. Attorneys collected $1.6 billion in civil and criminal debts in 1996. The Securities and Exchange Commission and other Wall Street regulators collected $1.37 billion in financial penalties from 20 major Wall Street firms between 1981 and 1994, according to a 1995 AP study.

Penalties and interest "are often at a level

Please see IRS, NEWS-7

Husband of murder victim 'trying to avoid nightmares'

Hillsborough resident Hans Leuenberger says he has been having nightmares since his wife was kidnapped and killed.

JOHN GREEN — Staff

By Heather World
STAFF WRITER

■ Suspect confesses, links others, police say

NEWS-2

HILLSBOROUGH — Justice will not ease Hans Leuenberger's loss.

"It may help my anger, but it doesn't bring her back," Leuenberger said in an interview at his home Sunday morning, almost two weeks after his wife Sharon's body was discovered inside a stolen van in San Francisco.

In his first in-depth interview since her death — just a day after the only named suspect in the kidnap-turned-slaying reportedly confessed to the crime — the 59-year-old grandfather of five said he has been trying to remember happier days and his wife's charitable ways.

"I'm trying to avoid the nightmares that wake me in the middle of the night," he said just prior to leaving to visit his brothers and sister in Switzerland for the next week.

"When I start to think of what she must have gone through — being brutalized for two, three, maybe four hours — I wake up in a cold sweat.

"I've already imagined the atrocious things," he said. "Maybe it's not as bad as I've thought. Maybe she had a heart attack and didn't know what happened."

Though he has promised himself not to make any drastic decisions in the next six months, the Swiss-born freight manager has decided to shut the rooms of the house that remind him of his wife's death.

"I'm going to close off this part of the house where a lot of things happened," he said.

Leuenberger said he will spend more time in the kitchen, where he remembers his wife cooking and singing. He wants to remember his wife as the woman who called her two daughters often and visited her mother daily.

Sharon's ashes are now buried, and the family has spent the last week collecting the tangible memories of her, compiling photo albums, sorting through notes she took and newspaper articles she clipped.

Though the process has been diffi-

Please see Victim, NEWS-7

GOOD MORNING

www.newschoice.com

NEWS		SPORTS
BAY AREA	2	SCORES	6
LOTTERY	2
LOCAL		CLASSIFIED
OBITUARIES	2	LEGALS	3
CALENDAR	3	AUTOS	7
EDITORIAL	6	RENTALS	3
OPINION	7	COFFEE BREAK
CUE		TV	2
MOVES	3	WEATHER	4

0 08820 01501 1

For circulation, call 839-7323
For classified ads, call 1-800-595-9595