'Movie Guy' column debuts
Barry Caine: 'Hours' may be tiresome, but seeing it can win relationship points
BAY AREA LIVING

Keep the faith columnist says
Pletschet urges investors not to abandon stock market out of Gulf War II anxiety
BUSINESS

MARCH 16, 2003
SUNDAY

A's-Tejada talks off
Schott: We can't afford MVP shortstop
SPORTS

Oakland Tribune

oaklandtribune.com | Serving Oakland For 129 Years | $1.50

INSIDE

Oakland Tech wins NC Div. I

Oakland Bulldogs advance to state championships with 60-48 victory over Valley High, Sacramento. But Piedmont girls lose to St. Mary's of Stockton in Division IV. Sports

'Riders' case forces cop reform

■ Oakland department has to fix itself or face U.S. Department of Justice action

By Laura Counts and Cecily Burt
STAFF WRITERS

OAKLAND — The actions of four allegedly rogue Oakland cops known as "the Riders" — and of the rookie who blew the whistle on them — potentially will change how all city officers do their jobs.

During the next five years, the Oakland Police Department will follow in the footsteps of a growing number of law enforcement agencies in other cities undergoing institutional reforms as a result of misconduct cases. Some police forces are responding to consent decrees imposed by the U.S. Department of Justice. Others, such as Oakland, are reacting to voluntary legal settlements.

The Oakland Police Department's $10 million reform effort, which comes on top of a $10.9 million payment the city agreed to make to 119 plaintiffs and their attorneys to settle a civil rights lawsuit, will be a legacy of the Riders.

The wide-ranging reforms will affect everyone, from the top brass to the cop on the beat, and everything, from checking out a canister of pepper spray or formatting reports to the handling of misconduct investigations. The new rules will lead to more oversight, and more paperwork.

Though the reforms called for in the settlement were reached voluntarily between the city and attorneys for the Riders' alleged victims, the negotiations were spurred by the threat of Department of Justice intervention.

If Oakland had not come up with its own reforms, the Justice Department might have imposed its own. Still, the agreement is no less binding. And although the city did not admit that

See REFORM, News 12

Doves sway state's Demos

■ Antiwar messages hailed by delegates at party's convention

By Steve Geissinger
SACRAMENTO BUREAU

SACRAMENTO — Whether Democratic presidential candidates addressed state convention delegates or spoke outside to antiwar protesters from the Bay Area on Saturday, the crowds cheered the doves and booed the hawks.

The liberal-leaning party delegates were sharply different in their responses to two leading contenders on the issue of Iraq, wildly applauding former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean but roundly booing U.S. Sen. John Edwards of North Carolina.

Slipping away from the pack of six hopefuls expected at the convention center in Sacramento, one candidate — former Illinois U.S. Sen. Carol Moseley Braun — drew cheers while addressing a rally of several hundred peace activists at the nearby state Capitol.

The Democratic presidential hopefuls picked their way through the political minefield posed by looming war as they informally kicked off campaigns in a state that may be decisive in their bids to oppose President Bush next year.

While addressing possible war, contenders spent most of their time criticizing Bush's domestic agenda on issues such as education, health care and the environment.

Republicans, meanwhile, dismissed the crit-

See PARTY, News 8

"Ever since I was a little girl, I was always fascinated with big cars. And the Hummer is so cool."
Tonya Montalvo, of Oakland

SUVs: It's a love-hate thing

NICK LAMMERS — Staff

TONYA MONTALVO, who also owns a Corvette, has not stopped driving her Hummer H-2 since she purchased it.

Despite critics, sales keep humming along

By William Brand
STAFF WRITER

WHEN TONYA MONTALVO rolls down the street from her house in the Oakland hills in her hulking, black Hummer H-2, she feels like the queen of the road.

That's not exactly a fantasy. At 6,400 pounds of high-grade steel, the Hummer H-2 is the behemoth of sport utility vehicles, a descendant of the sturdy vehicles made famous during the Persian Gulf War. It dwarfs even the hefty Cadillac Escalade SUV: bigger engine, more features and, although it weighs the same, the Hummer is 3 to 5 inches taller.

This is a formidable beast, and Montalvo loves it.

"Ever since I was a little girl, I was always fascinated with big cars," Montalvo explains. "And the Hummer is so cool. When they first came out, I sat in one and I told my husband, 'I want one of these.' But the H-1 costs more than $100,000.

"When the H-2 came out, it cost around $50,000. That's in my price range, and I bought it. I have a Corvette in the garage, and I haven't driven it since I bought the Hummer," says Montalvo, who works for a telecommunications company in San Francisco.

See SUV, News 13

INSIDE

SUV drivers say they are unfairly criticized. Now they want all the critics to listen to their stories.
Living

California has been intensifying its efforts to control auto emissions, pouring fuel on the decades-long battle between California and Detroit.
Business

IRAQ

U.S. lists Baghdad officials to be tried

■ Saddam, his 2 sons are among those who would be prosecuted for crimes

By Elisabeth Bumiller
NEW YORK TIMES

WASHINGTON — For the first time, the Bush administration has identified several senior Iraqi officials, including Saddam Hussein's two sons, who would be tried for war crimes or crimes against humanity after an American-led attack on Iraq, a senior U.S. government official said Saturday.

In addition to Saddam himself, the list includes members of his inner circle who sit atop a hierarchy of 2,000 members of the Iraqi elite who were previously identified by American intelligence agencies. But only now are the names of the top group being made public.

Administration officials said they had planned to send the list to Baghdad with a delegation from the Arab League in hopes of persuading the men to leave the country with Saddam as way to avoid a war. But the league, consumed by internal bickering and a brush-off from the Iraqi government, called off the trip, which had been planned for Friday.

Administration officials said they were making the list public now partly out of frustration, but also as part of the continuing psychological campaign against the Iraqi elite. President Bush and his senior advisers have repeatedly warned Saddam's loyalists that they have a choice between exile and prosecution.

In addition to Saddam's two sons, Uday and Qusay, the list includes Ali Hassan al-Hamid,

See IRAQ, News 8

Oakland author and teacher, killed in plane crash

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

ASHEVILLE, N.C. — A small plane crashed in a heavily wooded area of the North Carolina mountains, killing an Oakland author and her parents who were on a book tour for her first novel, authorities said Saturday.

Amanda Davis, 32, a professor at Mills College, had been signing her novel, "Wonder When You'll Miss Me" at an Asheville bookstore Thursday night.

The plane, piloted by her father James Davis, 63, of Setauket, N.Y., left Asheville Airport under cloudy skies just after noon Friday. Flight instructor Guy Maher said the elder Davis had been licensed to fly only in clear weather.

Davis, her father and mother, Francie, were killed when the Cessna 177 crashed in a heavily wooded area, said Maj. Jeff Willis of the Civil Air Patrol.

A search for the plane began Friday evening after it did not land as scheduled. A pilot searching in a plane found the crash site Saturday morning.

Amanda Davis taught an undergraduate course on writing fiction and a graduate fiction workshop at Mills College in Oakland. She had an MFA in fictiorf from Brooklyn College, in Brooklyn,

See CRASH, News 8

Inside
ANG NEWSPAPERS

CITYSIDE

New director for Chabot
Alexandra Barnett, new chief of Oakland's space, science center, promises fun exhibits

NEWS 12

Missing girl rescued in L.A.
12-year-old Richmond school student abducted Friday night is found after Amber Alert

WEATHER

Today
Cloudy, showers
High: upper 50s
Low: mid 40s

Yesterday
High: Alameda, 45
Low: Berkeley, 47

INDEX

Bay Area .....NEWS 2
Crossword .....LIVING 5
Legals.....CLASS 2
Lottery .....NEWS 2
Movies.....LIVING 7
Obits .....CITYSIDE 6
Opinion...CITYSIDE 10
Scores .....SPORTS 11
Weather .....TRAVEL 6