COLUMBUS, Ohio — Donald Trump romped to a landslide victory Tuesday in Florida, dealing a devastating blow to home-state Sen. Marco Rubio, who abruptly quit the race and removed one more obstacle to the businessman's march toward the Republican presidential nomination.

Hillary Clinton won primaries in Florida, North Carolina and Ohio, the night's most contested prize, as her rival, Sen. Bernie Sanders, struggled to get the boost he needs to try to close the gap in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination. A fourth race, in Illinois, was tight all evening and was called late for Clinton. Exit polls indicated a small lead for Sanders in the night's final contest in Missouri.

Trump also won the Illinois and North Carolina primaries, networks projected, but Ohio Gov. John Kasich prevailed in his home state, fueling the hopes of those seeking to stop Trump and throw the race open at a contested convention this summer.

In a concession speech delivered less than half an hour after the Florida polls closed, Rubio congratulated Trump, wagging a finger and shushing members of the audience who booed his kind words.

But then he devoted the bulk

LeQuinn Johnson didn't see the crash happen ahead of him late Sunday night.

"But I heard it," Johnson said Tuesday. "We were about seven cars behind it, and we all stopped. ... I just opened the door, jumped out and started running."

Johnson

Johnson, who on that rainy night was driving on Highway 4 with family from his Stockton home to Discovery Bay, didn't hesitate to jump into the water to try to save anyone in the Dodge minivan that had flipped upside down in about 3 feet of water in a roadside drainage canal. But he couldn't get everyone.

He got three young kids,

2011 Japan disaster revisited

Years after tsunami, coast is surprisingly clear

WASHINGTON DEPARTMENT OF FISH AND WILDLIFE

A boat linked to the Japan tsunami washed ashore in Washington in 2013. Just three items from the disaster are confirmed to have reached California.

When a massive earthquake and tsunami devastated much of Japan in 2011, settling homes, cars and millions of tons of debris into the Pacific Ocean, fears rose that vast amounts of wreckage — some of it toxic — might wash up on California beaches, foul harbors and even sink U.S. ships.

Government agencies sprang into action. And more than 16,000 volunteers scoured all 15 California coastal counties.

But when the fifth anniversary of the disaster passed Friday, only three pieces of confirmed tsunami debris had been found on California beaches.

"I expected much more,"
